Directions: Write a detailed analysis of the process you go through to tackle a challenging homework reading assignment such as a Biology chapter.

When I read homework I like to read in silence because I can concentrate well. I used to read when I'm in bed ready to sleep. When the books are full of letters and the letters are smaller I don't like to read it. I like the books that has pictures and big letters. Sometimes I just skip the pages to look if there is something interesting.

The most I like to read is romantic novels where talks about love, passion, and how to this? And that? You know boyfriends.

Directions: First, write a succinct summary of the assigned article. Then, write a personal reaction, making sure to refer back to specific issues and examples raised in the article.

In my opinion I am very devastated with what Ms. McIntosh has written, knowing the fact that racism is still going on in this world as we approach the year 2000, the new milenum and nothing has changed, this makes me sick in the stomach. Just because everyone is different due to race, gender, or by sexual orientation, are we going to hate each other? Racism is a big issue that we are facing today in society and if we do not stop it we don't know any other way to tell people how to stop it make them understand that the color of your skin is NOT a big issue. Hey maybe in the future some smart fours eyed scientist can mutate a gene from our DNA that makes all one color and if that ever happen what is going to our excuse? NOTHING!
