I had a wondering, I'm questioning you have to have multiple action and form/tables if they are different information?

Customers placing orders

Elizabeth Evans

I was just asking because I originally had 2 forms, one for orders and one for like just general contact but I think I might just keep to 1 of them to not be complicated haha

But it's good to know for future reference

Customer, products, orders, customer

- 51:51 Alright, let's go over
- 51:57 to our action page.
- 52:24 Correct? Quotes first, then pound sign. So like right
- 52:29 there, you want pound sign and pound sign.
- 52:34 And it may say that it already created the table for you, and
- 52:39 that's OK. It's already there. That means it created it.
- 52:43 Can you? How are you?
- 52:46 Constance, how are you?

Welcome to Web Application Development!

1. Adding Databases to the Picture – Congratulations! You have finally completed what I call the fundamentals of application development! It can be tough trip, especially for those students who are new to programming. This next phase is what I call the “fun part.” Beginning with this lecture we will hook to a database and from this point on we will be reading, writing, and updating info in our database via the Web...the fun part.

2. Getting the Database and Files – First, you'll need the database and some other...
