She noted that the gap is not only a social justice issue, but an economic issue. Dr. Pollard said that there are three ingredients in the formula for student success: money, support, and structure. With reference to the three ingredients, she mentioned the financial support provided to the students from the College, the support systems in place to assist students academically, personally, and socially, and the structure needed speaks to the student experience, especially outside of class.

The report focused on the College structures that can support student success and the policy framework that gives them their foundation.

Trustees’ comments focused on student data, which indicated a definite gap and the success of minority students, the College’s need to become more robust in supporting the students’ achievement, advocacy for employable students, supporting immigrant students, and mentoring students.
