START Internships:
Begin your career in homeland security here

Diverse opportunities available for a wide range of majors

START offers unpaid internships year-round focusing on the most up-to-date theories, methods and data related to the study of terrorism and violent extremism. The program is designed to prepare the next generation of homeland security scholars and practitioners through real-world research experience.

START’s internship program is open to undergraduate and graduate students in any related discipline from any institution. Participants work at least 10 hours/week during the fall and spring semesters and 20 hours/week during the summer. Our internships can be taken for academic credit, and interns participate in a wide variety of enrichment and career development opportunities.
